New on the website is coverage of our recent SLOBT Retreat which featured keynote speaker Rev. Ken Yamada (and many members of the Berkeley Sangha). It’s basically the same article that was published in the Gateway...but the photos are much larger on the website...many fond memories.

Message = Hello, I am in year 9 at school. In R.E I am currently doing a project about different religions including Buddhism. Your website has been very helpful for general information however I was wondering if you could help me answer my question: Is there any type of gender discrimination in Buddhism? I have been to other websites and found some information but your website seemed more reliable. Thank you, any help would be much appreciated. Please could you email any responses back to this account too.

Dear Maddie,

Thanks for visiting our Living Dharma Website. As to your question, if by “Buddhism” you are referring to the institutions of Buddhism such as sects, schools, organizations and so forth, in our Higashi Honganji school, with its headquarters in Japan—which as you may know is a traditionally male-dominant society—that probably is some discrimination, though it may often be subtle.

Of course, subtle or not, there have been many difficulties women have had to face in Buddhism, even going back 2500 years to Shakyamuni Buddha’s original Sangha (community of monks). For reasons that are...Please see L.D. NEWS, con’t on page 4

17th Annual WCBT Golf Classic

One could not have ordered a more perfect day for the 17th Annual WCBT Golf Classic. This year’s tournament was held on Friday, April 19, 2013, on the Eisenhower “Ike” Course at Industry Hills.

Sixty golfers began the day with a three-hole putting contest followed by scramble format golf on a difficult yet beautifully manicured golf course. The course was enhanced by the tee sponsor signs placed at the tee areas throughout the course. The tournament also included Closest-to-the Pin contests, a Most Accurate Drive contest and a Hole-in-One grand prize for $10,000. Following the tournament, there was an award banquet in the Cherry Hill Banquet Room and Raffle Drawing.

The results of the tournament were as follows:
Low Gross Winning Team (64) – Jerome Thibodeau, Jimmy Thibodeau,

A person called our temple this morning—she still wanted to learn about Buddhism despite her bad experiences: one place didn’t like her questioning what they did, another place wanted $150 at the door and an Asian immigrant place gave her nothing but “We don’t want you here” looks. At our temple, we welcome your questions, you don’t have to pay to attend our religious activities, and we definitely want diversity of all kinds.

The success of this classic was possible with the hard work of the golf committee members of Rev. Peter Hata, Barbara Shirota, Lillian Nishihara, Jack Wear, Steve Underwood and Chair Roy Takemura. Thank you to Richard Kagawa, Mei Ling Chen, Diane Hata, Emi Wexler, Mitzi Oshita, Tami Kitaura and Joy Kitaura with registration and passing out of the player’s goodie bags; Steve Underwood and Jack Wear for conducting the putting contest; Barbara Shirota, Tami Kitaura, Joy Kitaura and Lillian Nishihara for the raffle drawing; Jr. YBA for putting together the player’s bags; Dick Koga for donating the fruits; to all the Sangha members who made the spam musubis; and Rev. Of course, the tournament’s financial success would not be possible without the participants, sponsors and raffle prize donors. We look forward to your support and participation for the 18th Annual WCBT Golf Classic in 2014. Thank you!

unclear, when Prajapati asked the Buddha for permission to become a nun and join the Sangha, the Buddha declined. Of course, at that point in Early Buddhism, there were no Buddhist nuns, only monks. But still, Prajapati was excluded from the Sangha despite her being not only the Buddha’s aunt but his stepmother when his birth mother, Maṇḍā, passed away after giving birth to him. It is said she cried deeply from the rejection.

What’s even more surprising though is that Prajapati then made a bold decision. According to the East Asian Studies scholar Dr. Lori Meeks, despite the Buddha’s refusal, “Prajapati decided that she and her followers would shave their heads, don the saffron-colored robes of renunciants, and follow the Buddha to Vaishali. The trip, which they made on foot, and without male protection, required them to cover a distance of 150 miles. It is said that they arrived at Vaishali where the Buddha was then preaching, ‘with swollen feet and covered in dust.’ The trip had been very difficult. Seeing Prajapati and her followers in distress, the Buddha’s close disciple Ananda inquired, ‘Why are you crying?’ Prajapati explained the Buddha had refused to permit women ‘to renounce their homes and enter into the homeless state.’”

Ultimately, Ananda intercedes for Prajapati and tells the Buddha that he owes a great deal to Prajapati: “She was your aunt, nurse, and your foster mother.” In the face of these compelling arguments — and possibly, seeing Prajapati’s determination — the Buddha finally relents and admits Prajapati into the Sangha. As Dr. Meeks says, “What is most notable here is the boldness of her suggestion, especially at this early point in Buddhist history. Social equality between men and women would have been unthinkable during in Prajapati’s time. And yet she had the courage to resist a ruling, by the Buddha himself, which she viewed as discriminatory.”

While I agree with Dr. Meeks that Prajapati’s story is indeed an empowering one for Buddhist women, I believe it would be a mistake to interpret this solely within the context of the issue of gender discrimination. I think Prajapati’s story is ultimately not so much a testimony to women overcoming discrimination as it is a testimony to the power of the Dharma, to the truth of the teaching of impermanence. Prajapati deeply encountered impermanence through the death of her sister and the death of her husband. But then, having heard the Buddha’s teaching of a way to transcend the anxiety of death, she was sincerely drawn to the refuge she found within the teaching, and I believe this is what gave her the determination to walk 150 miles. So in this sense, Prajapati’s story should not only be a source of inspiration for Buddhist women around the world, it is a testament to the power of the aspiration to become a buddha. This aspiration for buddhahood, for enlightenment or awakening, is universal. When it arises within us, male or female, we are also moved to take refuge. Therefore, all of us, male and female, can learn from Prajapati’s example.

Still, Maddie, to refer back to your question, “Yes, there is still some discrimination against women in Higashi Hongoji.” Of course, in the 21st century, women are no longer excluded from the Sangha, and whatever discrimination there is would vary depending on specific temple, etc., but they probably still find it difficult to reach the highest positions of leadership. But despite that, following Prajapati’s example, female Buddhists who sincerely listen to the Dharma will — when moved by the power of the Dharma — change the face of Buddhism just like Prajapati did in ancient times.

Best Wishes,
Rev. Peter Hata

Message = Where can I find the letter about white ashes? My Japanese friend read that letter at my husband’s funeral and I would like to have it for myself. She is dying now herself and can’t tell me where the letter is. Thank you.

Dear Ruby,

Thank you for writing. Please allow me first to express my condolences to you for the loss of your husband, and now the coming loss of your friend. You had a true friend in your good husband whose life and death is now a continuous teaching of the life of the Dharma. You have a true friend in the Dharma who pointed out that teaching to you through the reading of “White Ashes.” Now you have the wonderful opportunity to be a true friend to her in sharing that same Dharma. The Buddha’s teaching of the dependence of all life together is being made known here. Together, you are all teachers of the Dharma to each other and to all.

The letter on “White Ashes” was written by Rennyo who was the eighth Monshu, or leader of the Hongan-ji (The Temple of the Primal Vow), a direct descendent of Shinran Shonin, the founder of Jodo Shinshu. Rennyo was born in 1415 and died in 1499. When he grew up the Hongan-ji had become a minor group, no longer effective in bringing forth the message that Shinran had developed through his life experiences. The Hongan-ji could so easily have disappeared. Rennyo threw himself into the work and facing the difficult challenges of his time, developed the teachings for this time and situation, explaining what was difficult and making it simple. At the end of his life the Hongan-ji had reformed itself and became one of the most vibrant schools of Buddhism that continues to this day. Rennyo is often referred to as “the restorer,” even as the “second founder.” One of the things he did in helping Hongan-ji to grow was to write letters to the fellow followers to help encourage and instruct them. These letters were collected together and have been read since at many of our services ever since. The letter “White Ashes” is one of his most poignant and beloved because it gets right to the heart of our daily condition. In his time, as in ours, our lives are shaped and torn about by various forces. We can have everything now, and lose it all in a matter of moments. He did not hide or sugar-coat the truth but brought it forth for us all to consider.

There are many translations of his letters. If you look for it, it is the 16th letter of the 5th collection of the “Gobunsho” or “Ofumi.” Here is the translation from the “Letters of Rennyo” (Shin Buddhist Translation Series), I hope this will meet your needs. We should all consider this letter to have been written to each of us because Rennyo wrote it for all fellow followers:

“When I deeply contemplate the transient nature of human life, I realize that, from beginning to end, life is impermanent like an illusion. We have not yet heard of anyone who lived ten thousand years. How fleeting is a lifetime!

Who in this world today can maintain a human form for even a hundred years? There is no knowing whether I will die first or others, whether death will occur today or tomorrow. We depart one after another more quickly than the dewdrops on the roots or the tips of the blades of grasses. So it is said. Hence, we may have radiant faces in the morning, but by evening we may turn into white ashes. Words fail to describe the sadness of it all.

Thus the ephemeral nature of human existence is such that death comes to young and old alike without discrimination. So we should all quickly take to heart the matter of the greatest importance of listening to the dharma, entrust ourselves deeply to Amida Buddha, and recite the nembutsu.

Humbly and respectfully.”

[Rennyo]

Ruby, thank you for writing. Please be strong in the teachings. We know, through the teaching of the White Ashes, that life is ever challenging, but that through the entrustment of our heart-minds to all that Amida Buddha represents, relying on the Nembutsu as that expression we can face the winds of impermanence with peace.

With the deepest gassho,
Rev. Frederick
仏教 Q&A

問い　お文（ふみ）に「後生（ごしょう）の一大事を心にかけて」と何度も出てきますが、死後の救いを願うことなのですか。

答え　蓮如上人は、特に「後生の一大事を心にかけて」と繰り返し教えられます。後生とは「後世（ごせい）」ともいわれ、今生（こんじょう）・現世に対して言及される言葉です。

「仏教では、生涯の旅終えるが死んだ先のことばかり言うから若い人に嫌われるのだ。もっと現実的に、生きている現在のことを教えなくては現代に通用しない」とよく言われます。

確かにその通りですが、それでは「死んだらおしまいだ」と言って、本当に現在を安心して生きていけるのでしょうか。

この人生が「旅」だとします。この人生の旅を終える時、心にかけないうちに死んでしまう時、初めて思い立てる生命（いのち）の旅はひとつの旅に従って、生きていることに有難さ、有難さを目覚めさせます。私たちの人生が旅を生きることを教えてくださった人から、「後生」は「最後の旅」と教えたのです。実はだれにとっても、今生の旅が心にたたかってヶりある死亡の旅を生きているのです。

この人生の旅は必ず終わります。しかかもいつ終わるかわかりません。明日終わるかも知れません。物見授けの旅ではなく、今生の旅を心にかけて生きることとは、明るく、明るく、明るく生きるということです。
